

We asked

2000 cyber execs

about Managed Detection & Response.

Here's what they reported.

We were curious about cybersecurity executives' current perspectives on Managed Detection & Response (MDR), so we worked with a third party to conduct a survey of non-DeepSeas clients. Respondents were functionally responsible for cybersecurity in their organization and held roles that were Director-level and above.

Do you see yourself and your team reflected in your peers' answers?

What is driving the need for MDR?

-  Business growth
-  Board requirement
-  Compliance/contractual requirement
-  Lack of confidence in our current provider
-  Our current solution is too expensive
-  We aren't interested in MDR but need other cybersecurity services

40%

of cyber leaders said they are not satisfied with their current MDR provider.

Did you know DeepSeas is ranked as a top 5 Managed Detection & Response provider in the Frost Radar™ and a top 40 MDR provider by Gartner? Industry analysts note that the DeepSeas approach is different. Especially differentiating is our focus on optimizing and orchestrating our clients' existing, third-party solutions in security environments, giving 24x7 visibility of and security for all attack surfaces.

Cyber leaders have

5

primary focus areas for MDR.

Did you know that DeepSeas is the first and only provider of MDR to cover all attack surfaces for both midmarket and enterprise organizations? Our advanced version of MDR provides a comprehensive approach to identifying, responding to, and mitigating active cyber threats across converged attack surfaces.

More than 50% of cyber execs don't have or don't know if they have the knowledge and expertise to transform their cyber defense program.

Did you know that DeepSeas is known for its transformational approach to MDR? In fact, as a client, we will guide you through our proprietary 3-phase framework that transforms your cybersecurity program.

Schedule time to speak with us about DeepSeas MDR.

